Q1

At a meeting of countries with the world's highest GDPs — the G-20 — the Prime Minister Narendra Modi spoke about the looming humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan, especially as winter nears. He also called for the international community to provide Afghanistan with "immediate and unhindered access to humanitarian assistance". The meeting came as the UNHCR published a new appeal for funds, with a report that half the population (more than 20 million people) are in need of "lifesaving humanitarian assistance", and the UN has received only 35% of the funds needed for its relief operations.

As a result of the Taliban takeover, most direct aid to the Afghan government has dried up; its reserves have been frozen by the U.S., making it impossible for salaries to be paid. The Taliban government's refusal to allow women to work and its stopping girls from schooling have made the situation more dire. While recognition of the Taliban and any governmental engagement is a long way off, the world is faced with the stark choice on how to ensure Afghanistan does not suffer further. At the summit, the EU committed $1.15 billion for Afghanistan and neighbouring countries where refugees have fled, while other countries including the U.S. and China pledged $1.1 billion at a donor conference in Geneva last month. India has not announced any monetary or food assistance.
