Since June, the export of about 500 tonnes of rice from India has triggered an uproar in several European countries on the grounds that it was genetically modified (GM) rice. This emerged during a check by the European Commission's Rapid Alert System for Food and Feed that was testing rice flour by the French company Westhove. On June, France had issued (A) a notification for unauthorised GM rice flour, (B) identifying India as the point of origin, (C) and alerting Austria, Belgium (D), the Czech Republic, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Poland, Spain, the U.K. and the U.S. as the possible destination of products made with the flour.

So in August, the American food products company Mars, fearing GM contamination, announced that it was recalling four of its product lines of 'Crispy M&M'. GM-free rice that is tagged as 'organic rice' is among India's high-value exports worth ₹63,000 crore annually. India does not permit the commercial cultivation of GM rice, but research groups are testing varieties of such rice in trial plots. So the suspicion is that rice from some of these test-plots may have "leaked" into the exported product. The Indian government has denied this possibility with a Commerce Ministry spokesperson alleging that the contamination may have happened in Europe "to cut costs". However, India has indicated that it will commission an investigation involving its scientific bodies.
