Monday's record rally in stocks should be seen as one that was ___(1)___ primarily by investor sentiments rather than by market fundamentals. As with any purely sentiment-driven rally, things can take a turn for the worse if subsequent events ___(2)___ to meet the market's expectations. There is very little in the form of market fundamentals to warrant the kind of exuberance shown by investors on Monday. Corporate earnings data released as of now for the January-March quarter suggest that earnings might actually witness a ___(3)___ fall from what they were a year ago. Growth has also been slowing down in core sectors as consumer demand has ___(4)___ to pick up and liquidity remains a concern across the economy.
