Cyber criminals stalk shoppers

ARTICLE

Tushar Mathur (name changed), 48-year-old Delhi-based creative art director, wanted to gift his wife a Louis Vuitton bag for Deepavali and decided to order it online. After seeing great 'festive' deals on the seemingly-genuine website, LouisVuitton.in, Mr. Mathur paid ₹36,000 for the bag. The bag was delivered to his place as promised, only it turned out to be a cheap imitation. Mr. Mathur tried to visit the website again to complain but the website no longer existed.

He is not alone. While the festive season is a booming time for online retailers and bargain hunters, cyber criminals also take advantage of this surge in online transactions.

ARTICLE

According to cyber security solution provider Check Point Software Technologies (CPTS), every year around festive season there is a spike in the number of new domains registered that contain the word 'Deepavali'. "This year we found a 200% increase in the number of new domains registered that contain the word 'Deepavali'. Three per cent of these domains have been found to be malicious and another 31% are suspicious," Harish Kumar, Head, Enterprise & Government, CPTS, India & SAARC told The Hindu. Likewise Amit Jaju, Sr. Managing Director for India at advisory firm Ankura, said based on the inquiries they have received and online statistics, there had been over 300% increase in cyber incidents in recent weeks leading up to Deepavali.

ARTICLE

“Social engineering attacks are the most commonly deployed form of attacks,” Ritesh Chopra, Director Sales and Field Marketing, India & SAARC Countries, NortonLifeLock said. These attacks use psychological manipulation to trick users into making security-related mistakes such as clicking on legitimate looking emails, weblinks or social media messages. While such attacks fall under the umbrella of ‘phishing attacks’, these are more sophisticated. Attackers may pick up some information already available about consumers and then build on it to trick them into taking an action.
