New opportunities for e-waste recyclers

ARTICLE

Over the next five years, Delhi-NCR-headquartered Attero Recycling, one of India's largest electronic waste management companies, expects to invest close to $1 billion in expanding their electronic waste recycling facilities. More than 70% of it is for setting up operations in Europe, the U.S. and Indonesia to recycle lithium-ion batteries premised on the increasing share of electric vehicles in future. Nitin Gupta, cofounder and CEO of the firm, says that while lithium batteries may be the future for the company, the present is hinged on the growing number of e-waste that his factory in Roorkee is processing.

ARTICLE

From 30% of sales in 2018, firms are expected to recycle 70% of sales by 2023.

“Prior to the Extended Producer Responsibility (EPR) regime, recyclers like us had to pay to procure ewaste. We extract the precious metals and sell them. The informal recyclers use hazardous methods and therefore were able to do this at a lower cost. Even if their recovery (of metals) was low, their costs were low and so profitable. Now with the EPR regime, it’s Original Equipment Manufacturers who are paying for recycling and a lot more is collected in the formal sector,” said Mr. Gupta.

ARTICLE

Last month, the Union Environment Ministry unveiled a set of draft rules that further incentivises registered electronic waste recyclers. The crucial difference from the 2016 rules is the generation of EPR certificates. The latest e-waste rules are yet to become law and the Environment Ministry has set a 60 day-period for public consultation. Recyclers on processing a certain quantity of waste would be given a certificate verifying this number by the Central Pollution Control Board (CPCB). Electronics goods companies can buy these certificates online from the CPCB to meet their annual targets.
