When it comes to students enrolling in study abroad programmes, India has fastened (1) China, for the most students leaving their home country as part of their education journey. India has seen a significant rise in the number of students studying abroad. A Red Seer research project predicts that by 2024, 1.8 million Indians would have spent $85 billion on education abroad. In addition to intriguing research prospects, the majority of nations provide international students with the option of staying behind on their visas to look for employment. The possibility to pursue (2) specialised courses, attractive compensation post-completion of education, exposure to multiculturalism, and high-quality education are among the main attractions for students looking to study abroad. However, recent reports of the deportation of Indian students from Canada have restored (3) many dreams and turned them rather into a nightmare.

This reported unfortunate incident happened on account of various factors including students seeking help from middle agents, falsified acceptance letters that were provided by these agents to enter Canada, and absence of communication between college(s) and students which resulted in students running (4) around from college to college because the middle agent didn't send them to the school they wanted. Every country's immigration laws consider misrepresentation a serious infraction, and the applicant's chances of success are slim. Only when the applicants can demonstrate that they had a sincere and reasonable belief that they weren't hiding any unnecessary (5) information does an exemption apply.
