A drug developed by the Defence Research and Development Organisation (DRDO) may reverse the heart damage caused by a protein in the SARS-CoV-2 virus, a study conducted in fruit flies and mice has found. Researchers from the University of Maryland identified how a specific protein in SARS-CoV-2, the virus responsible for COVID-19, damages heart tissue. They then used the drug, called 2DG, to reverse the toxic effects of that protein on the heart. Developed by Dr. Reddy's Laboratories in collaboration with DRDO, 2DG is an oral drug. The SARS-CoV-2 virus depends upon glycolysis or the breakdown of glucose for energy. The drug hinders the process of glycolysis and prevents the growth of the virus. People infected with COVID-19 are at a significantly higher risk for developing inflammation of the heart muscle, abnormal heart

RRB PO MAINS REVISION 2023

The scientists, who are from the University of Maryland, Baltimore, US, then used a drug to reverse the toxic effects of the SARS-CoV-2 virus protein on the heart.

"Our research shows that individual SARS-CoV-2 proteins can each do major damage to specific tissues in the body, similar to what has been found for other viruses like HIV and Zika," said senior author Zhe Han. Their findings, based on research with fruit flies and mouse heart cells, were published in Nature Communications Biology. Although scientists around the world rapidly developed vaccines and medications to lessen the severity of COVID-19 disease, the study said that these therapies did not protect the heart or other organs from the damage that could be done by even a mild infection.

"To treat patients in the long run, we must first understand the

RRB PO MAINS REVISION 2023

Last year, Han and his team identified the most toxic SARS-CoV-2 proteins in studies using fruit flies and human cells. They found a drug 'selinexor' reduced the toxicity of one of these proteins, but not the other one, known as Nsp6, according to the study. In their latest study, they found that Nsp6 turned out to be the most toxic SARS-CoV-2 protein in the fly heart. Next, the study said, they found that the Nsp6 protein hijacked the fruit fly's cells in its heart to turn on the glycolysis process, which enables cells to burn the sugar glucose for energy. Typically, heart cells use fatty acids as an energy source, but switch over to sugar metabolism during heart failure as these cells try to repair the damaged tissue. The researchers also found the Nsp6 protein did add damage by disrupting the cell's powerhouse, called the mitochondria, which produces energy from sugar metabolism.

RRB PO MAINS REVISION 2023

"We know that some viruses hijack the infected animal's cell machinery to change its metabolism to steal the cell's energy source, so we suspect SARS-CoV-2 does something similar. The viruses can also use the by-products of sugar metabolism as building blocks to make more viruses," Han said. "So, we predict this drug that changes the metabolism in the heart back to what it was before the infection would be bad for the virus, by both cutting off its energy supply and eliminating the pieces it needs to replicate," Han said. The researchers said that fortunately 2DG is inexpensive and is used regularly in laboratory research. Although 2DG has not been approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to treat disease, the drug is currently in clinical trials for the treatment of COVID-19 in India, the study said. "Too many Americans who have recovered from COVID wind up with
